February is American Heart Month, a time to focus on heart health and the simple actions that can truly save lives.

Heart disease continues to be one of the leading causes of death, and cardiac emergencies can happen anywhere—at home, at work, or in our community. Knowing how to respond makes all the difference. Early recognition, calling 911, and immediate CPR can double or even triple a person's chance of survival.

At Cetronia, heart health is at the core of what we do every day. Our teams are proud to serve as educators, first responders, and advocates for lifesaving skills like CPR and AED awareness. I encourage everyone to take a moment this month to learn more about heart health, refresh lifesaving skills, and share that knowledge with others. To get you started, here are 70 songs to perform CPR to.

Together, we can strengthen our community—one heartbeat at a time.

Boscola's 'Robin's Law' Would Create Domestic Violence Offender Registry Across Pennsylvania

By Senator Lisa Boscola

In the near future, I will be re-introducing "Robin's Law," legislation to establish a statewide domestic violence offender registry in Pennsylvania. This proposal, similar to a new, unanimously adopted Tennessee law, is designed to identify repeat domestic violence offenders, improve victim safety, and provide law enforcement and the public with critical information about individuals with documented patterns of domestic abuse.

Domestic violence is not always a one-time offense. Too often, individuals repeatedly engage in violent conduct against intimate partners or family members, escalating in severity over time and leaving multiple victims in their wake. While Pennsylvania maintains robust criminal penalties for domestic violence offenses, there is currently no statewide mechanism to track and publicly identify persistent domestic violence offenders once they reenter the community.

This bill would honor the memory of Robin Shaffer, a Quakertown woman who was brutally murdered by her estranged husband on June 15, 2004. Unfortunately, Robin's story is far from unique. In 2024 alone, 104 victims died from domestic violence in Pennsylvania, according to statistics from the PA Coalition Against Domestic Violence.

This legislation would establish a publicly accessible domestic violence offender registry maintained by the Pennsylvania State Police. Individuals who have been convicted of qualifying domestic violence-related offenses and who demonstrate a documented pattern of repeat abuse would be required to register. The bill would also impose criminal penalties for failure to register or update required information, and would require notification to victims and law enforcement upon initial registration and any subsequent changes of address.

Approximately 1.3 million women and 835,000 men are physically assaulted by an intimate partner annually in the United States. Domestic violence can happen to people of all racial, economic, educational, and religious backgrounds. Curbing domestic violence must be a priority for our state government in the future.

In June 2004, Robin Shaffer was murdered in Quakertown by her estranged husband who had a prior conviction for attempting to murder his first wife. The intent of my legislation is to help save the lives of women or men who may not know that their potential partner is a domestic violence offender, like Robin. Other states such as Tennessee, Kansas, Montana, and Oklahoma provide a Violent Offender Registries for their residents. We should do the same here in Pennsylvania.

Domestic violence is reinforced when abusers are not held responsible for their actions. Creating a statewide registry of Domestic Violence Predators will allow for more accountability. That is why I am working hard to urge my colleagues in the General Assembly to pass Robin's Law for those who suffer from domestic abuse.

Domestic violence can occur within a family, or an intimate relationship, as a way for one person to control another. Anyone can experience domestic violence; it does not discriminate. Domestic violence is a crime and there are legal protections available for you. You can get help.

If any of these things are happening to you, or you are afraid of your partner, you may be in an abusive relationship.
