Pennsylvania Farmers Combat The Spotted Lanternfly

By U.S. Senator Dave McCormick

Also this past week, I joined Senator Fetterman and our colleagues Senators Ron Wyden and Kirsten Gillibrand to introduce bipartisan legislation to help Pennsylvania farmers combat the spotted lanternfly. These invasive pests have spread across our Commonwealth and threaten crops that are critical to Pennsylvania's agricultural economy, including grapes, apples, peaches, and hops. Pennsylvania's farmers work hard to produce some of the best agricultural products in the world, and we need to make sure pests do not eat away at that hard work. By investing in research to better combat and control spotted lanternflies, this legislation will help protect our farms, support jobs, and strengthen Pennsylvania's agricultural economy.
