By Senator Lisa Boscola

I know a lot of times people wonder why I became a State Senator and what being a State Senator really means to me.

For me, it's such a privilege and an honor. I never take for granted the trust people place in me to represent them and their families. Being able to listen to people, understand what they're going through, and hopefully make a difference in their lives and in our communities is something I'm incredibly grateful for.

It's not just a title or a position. It's an opportunity to serve, to be a voice for people who need one, and to work every day to make our communities a little better. And after all these years, I still feel very fortunate to have that opportunity.

I guess, in a lot of ways, I didn't necessarily choose politics—it kind of found me. My parents showed me what it meant to care about your community and believe that your participation could make a difference. And as I got older, I realized how much those values had stayed with me and how much I wanted to carry that forward in my own way.

Both of

my parents had a tremendous influence on who I am and the values I carry with me today. My dad was a Marine and a steelworker, and my mom went back to school and built a career working for the County. They both worked hard, in very different ways, and they never expected anything to simply be handed to them.

I think those lessons have stayed with me throughout my life and really shaped the way I look at public service. At the end of the day, it's about understanding how hard people work, respecting that work, and making sure that people who are willing to work hard have a fair shot at succeeding.

For me, getting involved in politics was really an extension of what my parents had taught me my entire life: democracy is something you participate in, not something you take for granted.

(So, to all the parents out there who may think their kids aren't watching – trust me, they are...I know I was.)
